Visitors Guide

Welcome

The National Library of Australia rests on the lands of the Ngunnawal and Ngambri peoples and holds the world's largest collection of material relating to Australia and Australians.

Our renowned collection contains books, artworks, manuscripts, maps, newspapers and oral histories, as well as websites and digital publications. The Library is home to diverse stories, holding rich interpretations of our past and present, including records of First Australians cultures and migrant stories, alongside some of the earliest examples of European works about the Great Southern Land.

Here at the Library you can find the latest in Australian fiction, explore personal responses to climate change and delve into the largest Asian-language collection outside Asia.

The National Library Building

Designed in the contemporary classical style, the building was opened on 15 August 1968 by Prime Minister John Gorton.

Artworks on Display

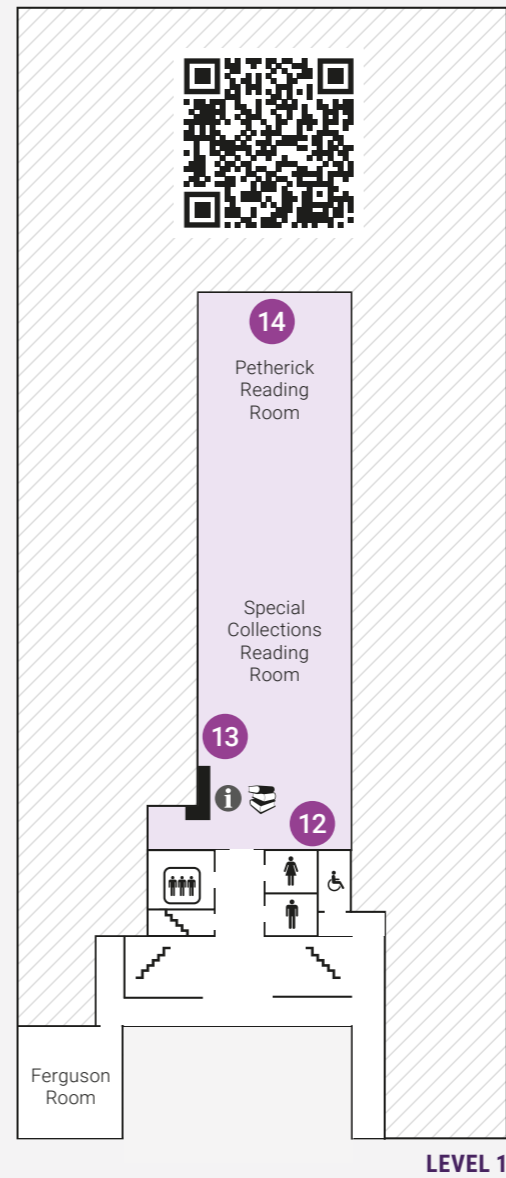

When Library architect Walter Bunning designed the building in the 1960s, he suggested six initial artworks to reflect the classical style of the building. Over time, more artworks have been installed around the building to highlight some of the unique works in the Library's collection. For more detailed information, scan the QR code on our map or visit nla.gov.au/about-us/our-building/art.

Books

Share the joy of reading with children. We have a small selection of children's books in the Main Reading Room—our friendly reading room staff can point you in the right direction.

If you're looking for books to take home, our bookshop has a range of books for everyone.

Discover

Our exhibitions often include family labels to help children enjoy their visit. Here are some tips:

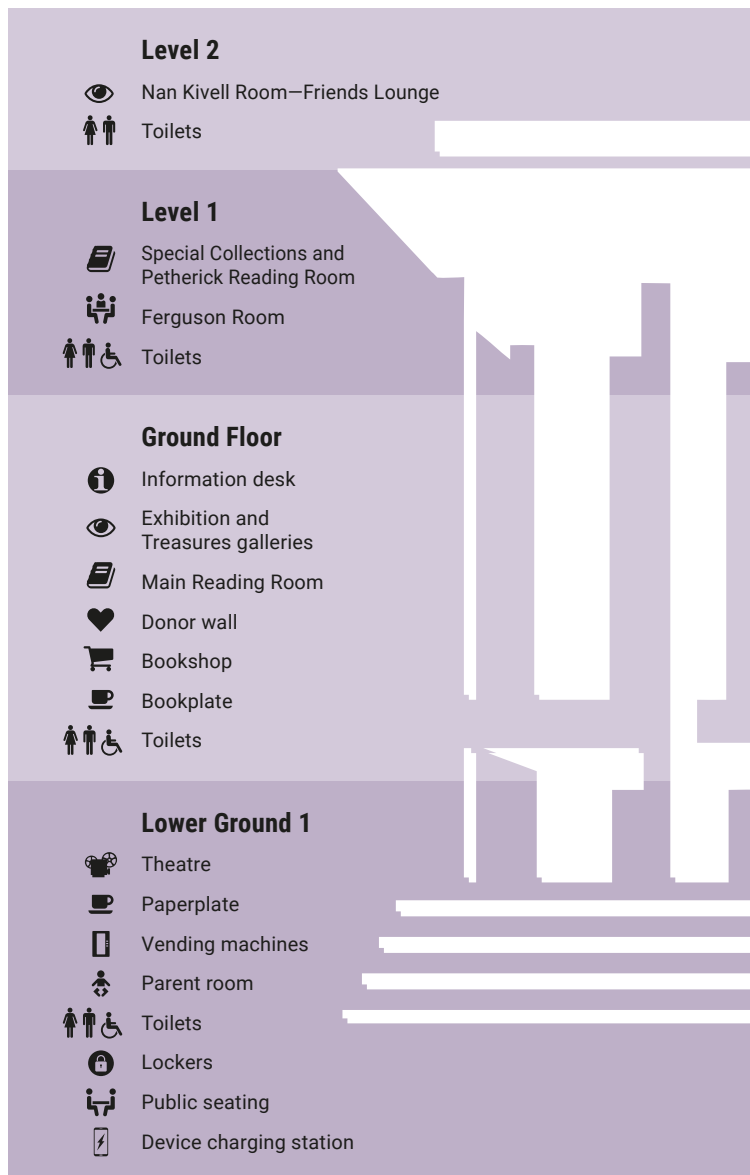

- let children take the lead
- if they're interested in something, ask questions!
How does it make them feel?
How do they think it was created?
What can we learn from it?
- if children are still struggling, try playing I Spy.

Learn

Our onsite and online programs offer lifelong learning opportunities, from Library tours to using specific resources and discovering our collection.

Our Australian curriculum-based school programs use exhibitions, collections and reading rooms as a springboard for students to find out more about Australian history and culture. Delve into our online Digital Classroom to find resources by year level.
